GET OFF YOUR MONEY

...five women who attack string instruments with a veracity that rivals some of rock's most venerated fret burners...rarely have songs taken from the public domain sounded so modern and vital.

— Dallas Observer

... a pep stepping girlie-girl, swamp-chthonic yet leather-tough take on early American roots music... The Stairwell Sisters swept out of San Francisco to assume its present role as collective dominatrix of allemandes and other unsquare moves.

— Michigan City Pulse

Producer Lloyd Maines recalls his first encounter with the band: "I happened upon this tribe of women musicians, playing old-time string music, with the power and excitement of a great rock band."

The Stairwell Sisters are career women, organizers, activists and mamas; making ends meet working and living in San Francisco. They also happen to crank out acoustic, old-time music with a punk-rock intensity. From old fiddle tunes to original songs of trial and loss and all-night parties, The Stairwell Sisters' third album carries the spirit and message of the urban evolution of country string band music.
